❖ Desk Analyst Comments 分析员市场观点

➤ WYNMAC: Adjusted property EBITDAR down 25.8% yoy to USD252mn in 1Q25

Wynn Macau (WYNMAC) reported 13.3% yoy decrease in operating revenue in 1Q25 to USD865.9mn, out of which operating revenue from Wynn Palace and Wynn Macau dropped by 8.7% and 19.9% yoy, respectively. By segment, casino revenue dropped by 12.2% yoy due to lower VIP win rate (2.6% vs typical win rate of 3.1-3.4%) and lower mass market table games win. Room revenue also fell in 1Q25 with lower occupancy rate along with lower average daily rate in both Wynn Palace and Wynn Macau, reflecting the new hotel supply and amenities from competitors. Adjusted property EBITDAR decreased by 25.8% to USD252.1mn in 1Q25. Moreover, WYNMAC's lower 1Q25 revenue is in contrast to SJM's 1Q25 revenue growth as discussed in 30 Apr '25.

As per WYNMAC, there is increase in direct VIP turnover in Apr'25 and yoy increase in mass table in May'25 due to Golden Week with full hotel occupancy. We also acknowledged that there is 41% yoy jump in visitors in Macau during Golden Week holiday. During the Golden Week holiday, the average number of daily visitors was 170k, higher than the government expectation of 158k. The Macao government expects GGR to increase c6% to MOP240bn (cUSD30bn) in 2025. The long holidays in May and Oct will be the keys to assess if the growth target is achievable.

During 1Q25, WYNMAC incurred capex of USD65.6mn for properties enhancements and maintenance, represented 40.1% yoy increase from 1Q24. WYNMAC budgets USD250-300mn capex in FY25 and USD450-500mn in FY26, mainly for the Wynn Palace Event and Entertainment Center project as well as Wynn Palace Theater and Resident Show, subject to government approvals. The maintenance capex in FY25 is budgeted at USD70-80mn. The EBITDA of WYNMAC was HKD4.8bn, cUSD620mn. We expect WYNMAC to fund capex with operating cash inflow.

As at Mar'25, WYNMAC had cash and cash equivalent and revolver borrowing capacity totaled USD1.8bn, compared to total debt of USD5.9bn. The net leverage increased to 4.7x at Mar'25 from 4.4x at Dec'24, owing to lower 1Q25 LTM EBITDA. The weighted average interest rate of WYNMAC in 1Q25 was 5.5%, down slightly from 5.6% in FY24. WYNMAC expects the weighted average interest rate to stay at 5.6% in FY25. WYNMAC will have next USD bond maturity in Jan'26, WYNMAC 5 ½ 01/15/26 with an o/s amount of USD1bn. We believe that its refinancing risk is low in view of its operating inflow and cash on hand, as well as its access to funding channels.

As we discussed before, our top picks within the Macao gaming sector, are MPELs and STCITYs/STDCTY. We also consider SJMHOLs good carry play. Meanwhile, we consider MGMCHIs and WYNNMAC'27 yield pick-up plays, trading at 66-114bps and 96bps pick-up over bonds of their US parents, respectively. We are neutral on SANLTDs on valuation.

➤ China Policy: Further monetary easing to defy tariff shock

China has launched additional monetary stimulus with a stronger commitment to boosting stock and property markets to defy the tariff shock. The stimulus policies would mildly ease liquidity and credit conditions, and encourage risk-taking in stock and property markets. But these policies cannot fully offset the negative impacts of the tariff shock on China's economy, as we expect China's GDP and CPI growth rates to be lowered by 1ppt and 0.2ppts in 2025. After reviewing the tariff's damage on China's economy and the progress of the Sino-US trade talks, Chinese policymakers might launch additional fiscal stimulus in 2H25 to boost household consumption. China's GDP growth might slow from 5.4% in 1Q25 to 4.5% in 2Q25 before mildly rebounding to 4.7% in 2H25, in our view.

New package of policies to ease liquidity & credit condition and boost stock & property markets. The package of policies includes: 1) RRR cut by 50bps (incremental liquidity supply by RMB1trn); 2) temporary RRR cut from 5% to zero for auto financial companies and financial leasing firms; 3) LPR cut by 10bps; 4) structural relending and PSL rate cut by 25bps; 5) housing provident fund loan rate cut by 25bps; 6) more quotas for various relending loans targeting to support technology, service consumption, elderly care, agriculture and SMEs; 7) combination of the two stock market support tools with a total quota of RMB800bn; 8) creation of a debt risk-sharing toll to provide low-cost relending funds to encourage purchases of bonds of technology firms; 9) stronger funding support to Central Huijin as the stock market stabilisation fund; 10) deregulation on insurers' investment in stocks to support the stock market; and 11) introduction of financing policies to help stabilize the property market. These policies will ease liquidity & credit conditions and boost sentiment in stock & property markets. We expect money market rates and loan rates might moderately decline with a mild increase of risk-taking in stock and property markets.

Stock, FX and property market performance as a key driver for policy dynamics. Chinese policymakers believe that the stock market performance reflects investors' expectations on China's economic prospects, which could in turn affect consumer and business behaviour in the economy. RMB exchange rates are also considered as an indicator for the strength of the economy and financial system. Therefore, weakening of RMB may restrain the room of PBOC's rate cuts to stimulate the economy. The recent sharp slide of US dollar has provided an opportunity for the PBOC to further cut the interest rates. The property market performance is key for economic growth, consumer confidence, local government revenue and financial system stability. Boosting the stock and property markets before the Sino-US trade dialogue might have special significance as it could show China's economic strength and resilience in the process of playing against the US.

Additional fiscal stimulus might come in 2H25. We believe the additional monetary stimulus cannot fully offset the negative impacts of the tariff shock on China's economy. The tariff shock might respectively lower China's GDP and CPI growth rates by 1ppt and 0.2ppts by reducing exports, undermining confidence, disrupting supply chains and intensifying deflation pressure. Monetary policy is used to expand liquidity and credit supply to encourage risk-taking with leverage. With high uncertainty and low confidence, however, both businesses and consumers are reluctant to increase debt to take risks. Therefore, fiscal policy is needed to directly expand aggregate demand and boost economic activities. Fiscal policy can also do a better job than monetary policy in targeted support to special groups of people or sectors to improve economic resilience. We expect China may expand its fiscal stimulus in 2H25 with more trade-in subsidies for durables, child-birth subsidies for couples, social endowment subsidies for the rural elderly and unemployment insurance subsidies for the unemployed.
